Bridgeton Prepares For 2014

By Mayor Conrad Bowers

As we enter 2014, we look back at some of the major events of 2013 that will impact 2014. During May we suffered our second tornado in a two year period.

This tornado was classified as an EF-2 in terms of wind velocity as compared to the 2011 EF-4 tornado; however, it damaged many structures and required an extensive limb clean-up period. Fortunately again, as was the case in the Good Friday 2011 tornado, there were no serious injuries. Unfortunately, the extended clean-up period necessitated delaying ongoing street and sidewalk repairs. We plan to catch-up completely, during 2014, using outside services if necessary.

In spite of the tornado the City took many positive steps during 2013. In November we completed and moved into the new Public Works facility on Fee Fee Road. The Bridgeton Planning and Zoning Commission approved the City's updated comprehensive plan. This plan provides a framework for making informed decisions, such as, rezoning properties and planning for major infrastructure projects. Many properties within Bridgeton's boundaries, purchased for noise abatement or airport expansion, remain vacant. Working with current airport management, we made a start to return vacant property to productive use. A new compressed natural gas fueling station, which will be open to the public, was constructed on land originally purchased by the airport for noise abatement.

Most significant in 2013 Bridgeton voters approved a one-quarter cent sales tax to fund bonds that are being issued to finance the construction of a new Bridgeton Recreation Center. These bonds were issued at a most favorable interest rate due to our City's maintaining a Moody's Investors Service credit rating of Aa-2.

This rating by Moody's is significant and demonstrates the excellent financial condition and stability of the City of Bridgeton. Only 25 cities in the State of Missouri have this or a higher Moody's rating. During December your City Council, in a unanimous vote, approved an agreement with the architectural firm of Hastings and Chevetta to design the new Bridgeton Recreation Center.

The new Recreation Center will be situated immediately behind the existing Community Center, which will remain open until the new center is completed during 2015. Please keep up with the progress on the new Recreation Center by visiting the Community Center or going to the City of Bridgeton website.

The City of Bridgeton will be very busy with other major projects during 2014. Phase 1 of the reconstruction of Fee Fee road, from Maryland Heights to Old St. Charles Road, will be completed in 2014. At the completion of Phase 1, we will be ready to start on Phase 2, which will continue from Old St. Charles Road to Highway 70. Additionally, our park system will continue to make improvements to our existing system of walking and bike trails. Plans exist to connect the Riverwoods Trail to trails in other communities, including the Katy Trail in St. Charles.
